

Klove radio has become a staple of music for my family, and especially for my 2 children ages 7 and 2. That is the only radio station we play in our cars. Our children know most of the words and sing along with the songs and make up words to fill the spots they don't know. With all problems going on today dealing with decency on television and radio it would seem contradictory to remove Klove from fm transmitters as that is one of the ONLY stations you don't have to worry about needing a time delay for. I know Klove is loved by many others who share my feelings. For some people Klove is the only way they are able to hear Christian music or even get close to GOD through praise and worship. There have been many testimonies about people being suicidal or depressed and they happened along Klove, listened for a while and were able to find the strength to pull through their problems. I know secular radio does not have that effect on people. People depend on Klove for support and removing that from their radios would be detrimental to them and to us all. In an age where the government is trying to clean up the air waves of curse words or nudity and make everything more family friendly, what purpose would it serve to remove a station you never had to worry about. If nothing else I would imagine your desire should be the opposite. Find a way to bring Klove into more houses. I would just be very disappointed if the FCC made a drastic mistake and chose to remove Klove and expand on their LPFM stations. Thank you.
